A few things that may interest you about Mud Crabs

- Once a crab is removed from a trap or net, tying the claws to the body will avoid personal injury and damage to the crab.
- Crabs may be kept alive for a number of days if kept in a cool, dark, fly-proof and moist environment. Place them in a well-ventilated plastic basket, cover them with a wet bag and ensure it is kept wet. Your catch may then be utilised over a number of days.
- Mud crabs should be killed prior to cooking. This may be achieved by either placing them on ice or by inserting a sharp instrument into the middle area of the underside of the body. Never place a live mud crab into boiling water because it will drop its claws & legs and water will be absorbed into the flesh

NEWSFLASH

When you are next at our Showroom ask Milsy or Neil at the Accessories Counter for a copy of the notice from the NT Fisheries Dept. outlining the changes to Personal possession limits, Effective 1st January 2010

It has been rather wet of late, so even more important to look after your 'pride and joy' during this period. So remember: If at all possible store your boat where it can dry out after use. Ensure the nose is up and bungs are out to allow for draining after those 'showers' we get from time to time. Make sure the bilge is working and if storing your beloved under boats covers, ventilation under the covers is a must.

From all of us at In & Outboard Marine, we wish our customers good and safe boating for 2010
